Greenlee Launches NETcat® Pro NC-500 Structured Wiring Troubleshooter One touch testing verifies network cabling and service

ROCKFORD, Ill. January 22, 2007 —Greenlee, a Textron company (NYSE: TXT), has launched its new NETcat® Pro NC-500 structured wiring troubleshooter is a member of its growing LAN product line. The NETcat® Pro is a digital tool designed for fast, accurate checking of cables, wiring and network service.

According to Jim Carefoot, VDV Product Manager, “At the top end of our latest group of communication wiring tools, the one-button, touch-screen NETcat Pro not only tests wiring continuity and proper pair allocation, but measures the length of cables and determines what kind of network service is available.”

The NETcat Pro NC-500 troubleshoots and verifies a wide range of network wiring. It generates four distinct, precision tones for tracing low-loss cables like Category 5 and 6. The troubleshooter can detect shorts opens reversed, crossed and split pairs and identifies active network devices (PC or Hub) on 10/100 Base-T networks. Network device capability. The display language can be set to English, Spanish, French or German.

Using a fingertip or the built-in stylus, the back-lit graphical touch screen display can be used to control a range of tests from fault finding to time domain reflectometer (TDR) length measurement. The true TDR shows length of each pair for distances between zero and 2000 feet.

When used with the seven expansion remote test modules found in the NC-510 Accessory Kit, the NETcat Pro can uniquely test shielded or unshielded twisted pair and coaxial cables from a central location eight at a time.

The NETcat Pro NC-500's remote units uniquely identify each jack, and provide full wire-map and fault display in addition to the length of each pair.
